

MENTAL HEALTH AND READINESS

In Combat, Soldiers: Have experiences that may affect their mental health.

At home, Spouses: Maintain individual and family mental well-being.

Potential Concerns: Spouses may experience difficulty adjusting to Soldiers being away, becoming anxious, depressed or angry with their Soldier or the Army. Children may be depressed or upset about the deployment as well. Spouses and children may be concerned about how the deployment will be or is affecting their Soldier.

ACTIONS SPOUSES CAN TAKE: Recognize that you and your children may need mental health assistance to better cope with the deployment. Know what mental health resources are available for you and your family.

ACTIONS SOLDIERS CAN TAKE: Monitor your own well-being. There are many ways to seek help while you are deployed, if it is needed, including unit chaplains, battalion aid stations, mental health professionals and Combat Stress Control (CSC) professionals.

INDEPENDENCE

In Combat, Soldiers: Make decisions that revolve around their deployment and are less available to participate in household decisions.

At home, Spouses: Function alone or as single parents by making household decisions with less input from Soldiers.

Potential Concerns: Some of the decisions that Spouses make may not be agreed upon by Soldiers. Spouses may be reluctant to make independent decisions during the deployment.

ACTIONS SPOUSES CAN TAKE: Seek your Soldier's input on major decisions, but be ready to make most decisions on your own.

ACTIONS SOLDIERS CAN TAKE: Respect and appreciate your Spouse's independence. It is essential for your Spouse to make decisions in your absence.

NAVIGATING THE ARMY SYSTEM

In Combat, Soldiers: Follow rules and regulations.

At home, Spouses: Navigate the Army environment, using the available resources, in order to better integrate into the military community.

Potential Concerns: Spouses may be angry and resentful for having to deal with a complicated, bureaucratic organization (e.g., TRICARE, DEERS). Perceived lack of information or help from Soldiers' units or military agencies may also cause frustration.

ACTIONS SPOUSES CAN TAKE: Learn the Army system by asking questions. Be patient, it takes time. Anticipate changes that will occur during the deployment (such as starting a new school) and know how to get through them without your Soldier's presence. Be prepared to solve many problems on your own.

ACTIONS SOLDIERS CAN TAKE: Prepare your Spouses as much as possible prior to the deployment by sharing all information you have about Army services and making sure that they have needed power(s) of attorney. Show your Spouse local service locations. Help your Spouse navigate the system.

DENIAL OF SELF (SELF-SACRIFICE)

In Combat, Soldiers: Literally put their lives on the line for their fellow Soldiers in service of their country.

At home, Spouses: Often sacrifice their own needs and desires (careers, educational goals, proximity to family and friends, etc.) by placing their needs last.

Potential Concerns: Both Spouses and Soldiers may feel that they are sacrificing a lot and are not being fully appreciated.

ACTIONS SPOUSES CAN TAKE: Tell your Soldier you appreciate their sacrifice and you recognize being a Soldier is difficult.

ACTIONS SOLDIERS CAN TAKE: Be aware that you are not the only one making sacrifices. Show your Spouses how much you appreciate their hard work and encourage them to pursue their own interests.

CUES FOR HELP

If any of the following are severe, persistent or interfering with Spouses' or Soldiers' daily lives:

- Feeling depressed, down, angry, tense, hostile, irritable, or resentful
 - Isolation or withdrawal from relationships and activities
 - Sleep problems or appetite changes
 - Using medications, illegal drugs or alcohol to cope
 - Taking out frustrations on others
 - Suicidal or homicidal thinking, intent or actions
 - Family, coworkers or friends tell you that you need help
- Changes in children's normal behaviors and persistent problems:
- Irritability
 - Problems controlling temper, fights, hitting/biting/kicking
 - Attention problems
 - Withdrawal, sadness
 - Academic problems
 - School personnel, friends or others tell you your child needs help

MENTAL HEALTH RESOURCES

- Military or Civilian Religious Personnel
- Mental/Behavioral Health Services
- Army Community Services (ACS)
- Social Work Services (SWS)
- Family Advocacy Program (FAP)
- Child Youth Services (CYS)
- New Parent Support Program (NPSP)
- School Counselors

Army/Military One Source: 1-800-342-9647

www.militaryonesource.com

WRAIR Land Combat Study Team

(301) 319-9607

The opinions and views expressed here are those of the Land Combat Study Team, and do not necessarily reflect those of the U.S. Army or the Department of Defense. Updated 19 JAN 07.

www.battlemind.org

Spouse Battlemind Training

Helping you and your Family Prepare for Deployment

Training Timeframe: PRE-DEPLOYMENT

Walter Reed Army Institute of Research (WRAIR)

Spouse Battlemind is the Spouse's ability to face deployments with resilience and strength, allowing easier separations and smoother reunions.

Key components include:

- Independence: the capability of having a fulfilling and meaningful life as part of an Army Centric Family.
- Resiliency: the ability to overcome setbacks and obstacles and to maintain positive thoughts during times of adversity.

The effects of deployments on families can:

- Vary amongst family members.
- Have a positive impact and bring you closer together.
- Introduce issues that may affect your or your family's well being.

Spouse Battlemind skills increase your and your family's resiliency throughout the military deployment cycle

Buddies (Social Support)

Adding/Subtracting Family Roles

Taking Control

Talking it Out

Loyalty and Commitment

Emotional Balance

Mental Health and Readiness

Independence

Navigating the Army System

Denial of Self (Self-Sacrifice)

BUDDIES (SOCIAL SUPPORT)

In Combat, Soldiers: Will often have fellow Soldiers as their primary source of social support.

At home, Spouses: May have develop new friends, strengthen friendships, become more involved in the Army community and participate in new activities. Some Spouses may return home to their families.

Potential Concerns: During a deployment, Spouses and Soldiers will have different sources of social support which can weaken marital relationships. Decreased shared experiences can hinder meaningful communication.

ACTIONS SPOUSES CAN TAKE: Know that your Soldier can't be your sole source of support while deployed. Develop and maintain a dependable support system. Keep your Soldier informed of changes in your friendships and activities. If you leave the area, stay in touch with your FRG and other military support resources.

ACTIONS SOLDIERS CAN TAKE: As much as possible, provide emotional support to your Spouse through letters, email, phone calls, and other means of communication. Plan how you will do this before you deploy. Actively support your Spouse's plans to develop a strong support system.

ADDING/SUBTRACTING FAMILY ROLES

In Combat, Soldiers: Are removed from the daily lives of their families and miss family events (e.g., anniversaries, births, graduations, birthdays, sporting events, etc.).

At home, Spouses: Will perform roles that might otherwise be shared.

Potential Concerns: Spouses might feel overwhelmed or unprepared for the additional roles that need to be taken on. Soldiers may feel left out.

ACTIONS SPOUSES CAN TAKE: Discuss with your Soldier all of the roles that you will assume before the deployment. Make the transition while your Soldier is still home.

ACTIONS SOLDIERS CAN TAKE: Provide your Spouse with the necessary tools and resources to perform all of the family's roles before you deploy (power(s) of attorney, account numbers and passwords, important documents, contact numbers, etc.).

TAKING CONTROL

In Combat, Soldiers: Soldiers can't be in control of what is going on at home.

At home, Spouses: Are the head of the household.

Potential Concerns: Spouses may resent Soldiers' attempts to micromanage or completely detach from the household while deployed. Spouses and Soldiers may disagree on the details of the family's priorities. Conflicts may arise over how money is managed during the deployment.

ACTIONS SPOUSES CAN TAKE: Pace yourself and only take on essential tasks and responsibilities. Keep your Soldier up-to-date on any unplanned expenses that occur during the deployment.

ACTIONS SOLDIERS CAN TAKE: Trust and encourage your Spouse to set priorities. Encourage and help your Spouse to do what is needed to keep the family going. Understand that changes will likely occur. Don't micromanage the household while you are deployed.

TALKING IT OUT

In Combat, Soldiers: Work long hours, nearly every day, with very little downtime and usually limited access to phone or email.

At home, Spouses: Are also only able to share a limited amount of what occurs during the deployment due to communication limitations.

Potential Concerns: Soldiers may not share their feelings or experiences while they are deployed because they do not want Spouses to worry, they may not have time to fully engage in the conversation or they are not ready to talk. Because communication is limited, the likelihood of rumors spreading increases.

ACTIONS SPOUSES CAN TAKE: Talk with others about how the deployment is affecting you. Make sure your children have a chance to keep in touch with your Soldier as well. Be patient and understand that your Soldier may not share details of what he/she is going through or understand what you are experiencing. Consider keeping a journal.

ACTIONS SOLDIERS CAN TAKE: Don't expect your Spouse to understand what it is like in a combat environment unless you share your experiences. Recognize that your Spouse and children will have a deployment story to share as well. Explain to your children why and for how long you will be gone.

LOYALTY AND COMMITMENT

In Combat, Soldiers: Need to know their Spouses will remain committed and be there for them when they return.

At home, Spouses: Need to know their Soldiers will be committed during the deployment.

Potential Concerns: Both Soldiers and Spouses may doubt how well they can handle being separated for such a long time. Also, Spouses and Soldiers may have issues of mistrust, jealousy and commitment.

ACTIONS SPOUSES CAN TAKE: Tell your Soldier how much you miss him/her and how happy you will be when he/she is back. Stay connected (poems, letters, tapes, gifts, videos, etc.).

ACTIONS SOLDIERS CAN TAKE: Tell your Spouse you love and appreciate her/him. Try to stay connected with your Spouse in any way you can. Be creative!

EMOTIONAL BALANCE

In Combat, Soldiers: Are trained to control their emotions in order to be successful.

At home, Spouses: Manage individual and family emotional well-being with less emotional support from Soldiers.

Potential Concerns: Soldiers may begin to detach from the family prior to deploying, which can lead Spouses and children to become anxious, angry or worried. Couples and children may argue more as the deployment nears. Soldiers may also seem distant during mid-tour leave.

ACTIONS SPOUSES CAN TAKE: Be patient. Emotional detachment can be common in Soldiers preparing for combat and during deployment (including mid-tour leave).

ACTIONS SOLDIERS CAN TAKE: Understand that you may be more easily frustrated or feel detached as the deployment nears. Stay as involved as possible with your family before you leave. Let your Spouse and children know that you care and are concerned about them while you are deployed.