Capital Markets Commentary (as of October 31, 2021)

Capital Markets Overview

Markets continued momentum in October thanks in part to encouraging corporate earnings and easing of fears around China's property sector. Economic data indicated a market slowdown in activity, but consumer confidence is very high. Disruptions in the supply chain leading to shortages of big-ticket items seems to have discouraged spending more than a decrease in demand. The economic data did not have an impact on the Federal Reserves plan to taper their purchases in December as they still believe elevated inflation figures are still believed to be transitory.

Domestic Equity Markets

The S&P 500 returned 7.0% in October. All of the S&P 500 sectors showed positive returns across the board. Consumer Discretionary, Energy, and Technology outperformed and returned 10.9%, 10.4%, and 8.2%, respectively. Laggards included Utilities,, Consumer Staples, and Telecom coming in at 4.7%, 3.9%, and 2.8%, respectively.

International Equity Markets

International equities underperformed the U.S. in October. Developed international markets, as measured by the MSCI EAFE index, rose 2.5% for U.S. currency investors. The MSCI Europe index rose 4.5%, Japanese equities retreated -3.4% per the MSCI Japan Index. Emerging market equity markets, as measured by the MSCI Emerging Markets index, posted a 1.0% gain.

Fixed Income Markets

Overall Bond markets were slightly negative to flat during October. The Bloomberg U.S. Aggregate Bond index remained flat over the period. The yield on the 10-year Treasury closed at 1.5%, staying flat for the month. Riskier parts of the bond market, had muted gains for the month. The Bloomberg High Yield index fell a modest -0.2% in October.
